

WELCOME TO THE HILBERT CIRCLE THEATRE

Fun Facts about the Hilbert Circle Theatre, the Home of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra

- ❖ The Hilbert Circle Theatre opened in 1916 as one of the first deluxe movie palaces west of New York City to show silent films.
- ❖ In December 1996, the "Circle Theatre" had its name changed to the "Hilbert Circle Theatre," thanks to a generous donation of $10 million from Stephen Hilbert.
- ❖ After being revamped from a movie theatre to a concert hall, it was reopened in October 1984 as the new home of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Is there a dress code?

Many different styles are worn at ISO concerts, from casual, to business casual, to black tie. Wear what you feel most comfortable wearing.

What happens if I arrive late?

If you arrive after the concert has begun, you will be asked to wait in the lobby area until the first movement has completed or there is a break in playing.

Can I use my phone during the performance?

No. Please keep cell phones off or in silent mode during performances in the hall.

Can I take pictures inside the hall?

No. Photography or recording is strictly prohibited.

What is happening on stage when I arrive?

When you arrive, you will notice that some of the musicians are warming up their instruments on stage. Musicians are allowed to practice on stage until the stage lights get really bright. This is their signal to cease playing and watch for the Concertmaster entrance.

When do I applaud?

Applause is held until after a complete composition and not given between movements. When in doubt, refer to your program and watch for the conductor to indicate the appropriate movement or wait until others applaud. The conductor usually leaves the stage between pieces and will return to the stage to acknowledge continuous applause. If there is a soloist, the soloist will also leave the stage and re-enter with applause.
